Re: 2011-2012 Bat Regulations

As you are probably well aware, the NMAA Membership voted to mandate the use of wood/composite wood bats during the 2012 baseball season. As the 2011-2012 school year begins, here is some important information regarding these new bat regulations.

The NMAA Bylaws state the following in Section 7.12.7:

Only wood or composite wood bats may be used during the 2011-2012 school year. NO metal bats may be used. This rule shall be in effect for ALL levels of high school play.

- A. Wood Bats – Any single piece wood bat shall be deemed legal as long as it adheres to NFHS standards as listed in the baseball rules book. These standards state that a single piece wood bat must be no more than 36 inches in length with a barrel no more than 2 ¾ inches in diameter.*
- B. Composite Wood Bats – Composite wood bats shall be deemed legal as long as they adhere to NFHS standards which states that the bat must be BBCOR certified. This certification must be permanently displayed on the bat by way of a BBCOR stamp.*
- C. BBCOR Certified Metal Bats – All BBCOR metal (aluminum or composite metal) bats are illegal for use during NMAA sanctioned high school contests. These bats may, however, be used in practice.*

Per these bylaws, any team traveling to New Mexico to play a high school contest at an NMAA Member School must use wood/composite wood bats. However, it has come to our attention that some border schools are losing games because many out of state schools do not want to follow these bat regulations. With that, the NMAA has decided that a host school may allow for an out of state team to use BBCOR certified metal bats. This should be determined well in advance and game officials should be contacted so that they are aware of the situation upon arrival to the contest. Should the host school allow for the out of state team to use BBCOR certified metal bats, the NMAA member school must still adhere to NMAA bylaws and thus must use wood/composite wood bats.

If an NMAA Member School is traveling outside New Mexico for a high school contest, they must follow the host state association's bylaws regarding bat regulations. Most other states follow NFHS rules regarding bats, which allow for the use of any BBCOR certified bat (metal, composite wood, etc.) or a single piece wood bat. This allows for the NMAA member school to choose what they would like to use when playing outside New Mexico.

It should also be noted that the above bylaws pertain to all levels of HIGH SCHOOL baseball only. Middle school programs must adhere to normal NFHS standards and thus BBCOR certified metal bats can be used. However, if a middle school student is participating at any high school level, this student must use a wood/composite wood bat.

Although BBCOR certified metal bats cannot be used during high school contests, they may be used during practice. The NMAA recommends that all metal bats from past years that are not BBCOR certified should not be used.
